Two Truths and One Lie

The first step to have a successful work in teams is knowing each other. This is a warm up activity for all participants get to know each other and break the ice of the group, so they can start to work in teams.

In group, each participant may tell three facts about himself/herself: two of them must be truth and one lie. The rest of the group must guess which one of the statements is the lie. This activity allows us to get to know each other better and develop teamwork skills in disabled people.

Drop the coin!

How much do you trust your peers? The aim of this activity is to discover it. Participants will prove how to overcome obstacles and reach a specific goal by working in teams.

We just need two coins for each two people, masking tape and a bucket, box or garbage can!

How much have you learned? (2)

1. Was this a fun task for your group? Why or why not?
2. Did everyone give the same amount of input?
3. Were any of your ideas rejected? If so, how did you feel? Did you stop giving ideas?
4. What is the hardest part about group decision making?
5. Would you want to go on the trip you planned?
6. Would you want to go on a trip that another group planned?
